

Jungwon graduated with honours in Graphic and Media Design at the London College of Communication, University of the Arts, London before completing an MA in Information Experience Design at the Royal College of Art. During her studies, she was drawn to the fact that light is an intangible material creating tangible experiences for people, and used light as one of the significant mediums in her work.

In 2016-17, Jungwon collaborated with Japanese poet Shuntaro Tanikawa on a sensorial experience at the Kyoto Design Lab. She also previously worked as a freelance fabricator at Random International.

Jungwon was interested in working on bigger projects with larger visions and broadening her knowledge of architecture and the built environment, and so in 2018 she joined Speirs + Major. She is currently working on a new residential development in Tottenham Hale and the Battersea Power Station, both in London, as well as a large new airport terminal in Singapore.

Jungwon is fluent in Korean and English and in her spare time likes attending theatre and performances in London.
