

Rafael studied architecture at the Universitat Politècnica de València before moving to Central Saint Martins in London, where he designed an experimental school for lighting artists for his final degree project. His interest in the way lighting can transform cities after dark sparked his move into lighting design.

Rafael joined Speirs + Major in 2018. He has since assisted with several projects including the Broadgate Estate development in the City of London and Taikoo Place, a large mixed-use development in Hong Kong. He was also one of the designers for the 2018 Darc Awards installation, which was installed for a one night event in London. Rafael especially enjoys working on landscape projects and designing and prototyping products.

Outside of work, Rafael enjoys drawing, street photography and attending live music events. He speaks Spanish, Catalan and English fluently.
